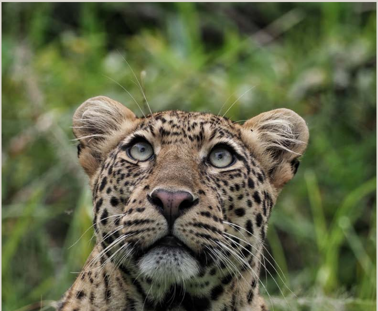
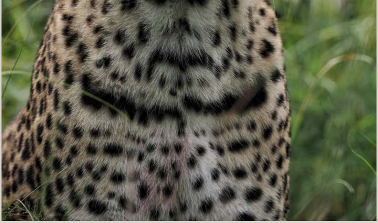
WILDLIFE

With 10 identified vegetation biomes in the park, Akagera supports a large diversity and density of wildlife. The park is home to leopard and lion, white rhinos, eastern black rhinos, buffalo, Masai giraffe, zebra, and interesting antelope such as topi, roan antelope, the elusive sitatunga, and oribi, alongside 520 bird species, including the rare and sought-after shoebill. This remarkable conservation success story owes its achievements to species reintroductions and a sustainable management partnership between the Rwanda Development Board and African Parks.





04 IMPACT

Wilderness Magashi Peninsula embodies a purpose-driven ethos, combining luxury tourism with impactful conservation and community initiatives in partnership with African Parks and the Rwanda Development Board, collectively called the Akagera Management Company.

Conservation:

- Ongoing charismatic species data collection.
- Habitat restoration through alien invasive vegetation removal in partnership with African Parks on the private Magashi Concession.

Community Empowerment:

- The camp fosters local talent and provides meaningful employment.
- Three Rwandan guides from sister camp Magashi are the first to obtain FGASA qualifications in the country, with one also being the first female guide to achieve this milestone – reflecting Wilderness' commitment to skills development.
- Wilderness' flagship Impact programme, Children in the Wilderness, has partnered with the schools and community in Akayange village situated close to Akagera's North Gate.

Sustainability:

- The development of commercial beds in our Wilderness camps, and resulting revenue generation directly to Akagera through bednight and conservation levies, has enhanced the national park's ability to become fully sustainable.
- The camp operates on 100% solar power with a light environmental footprint.
